

International efforts to protect the environment (United Nations as a sample)

Ramadan Abdella Mohamed Elamouri

Faculty of Law, Sidra Gulf University, Libya

ramdan20112001@gmail.com

Abstract

The study aimed to identify the efforts done by the United Nations in setting the general policy for the protection of the environment and to identify the obstacles facing the United Nations. The study objectives were based on the descriptive analytical approach. The study reached several results the most important of which is that the United Nations has made great efforts to protect the environment but these efforts are within the limits of weak implementation due to weak international funding for the environmental protection program and the lack of commitment by the major countries of technology transfer to poor countries to prevent pollution and reduced environmental awareness at the international level the local and the absence of an international lobbying body for environmental crime and the absence of a court for environmental crimes and the absence of the obligatory nature of international environmental law. The indicators and results of the trainers, the commitment of the major countries to provide the poor countries with the technology to reduce pollution increase international funding for the environment program spread environmental awareness among the members of the international community and urges countries to spread it among their citizens and establishes a special court for environmental crimes and its provisions will be enforceable and implemented with full force and will An international regulatory body whose mission is to demonstrate environmental violations and refers them to the competent court to give the status of commitment to international environmental law the commitment of donor countries to their financial burdens and to form a body tasked with overseeing international agreements to implement them.

Keywords: international efforts, environment protection, United Nations